DISCLAIMER AND TERMS

In the Lead-Zinc 2026 symposium, the Mining and Materials Processing Institute of Japan (MMIJ) does not restrict the submission of articles or presentations that have already been made public to other academic societies or conferences.

Any issues related to duplicate evaluation of academic achievements, such as those arising in promotion or performance assessments, shall be the sole responsibility of the authors. Authors are advised to clearly indicate duplicate presentations in their list of achievements where applicable.

When preparing manuscripts for this symposium, if the manuscript contains previously published material, the authors must obtain permission from the relevant copyright holder and publisher. Such reproduced material must be clearly identified in the figure captions or text, together with appropriate citation of the original source.

If any modifications are made to previously published material, the authors must also obtain permission for such modifications, and the nature of the modifications must be clearly stated in the manuscript with proper citation.

The electronic proceedings of Lead-Zinc 2026 will be distributed to symposium participants. After a certain period, the proceedings may be made available for purchase by MMIJ.

MMIJ shall not be held responsible for any issues arising from individual articles or presentations, including but not limited to matters concerning copyright, image rights, or personal information. Authors are solely responsible for ensuring compliance with all relevant laws and regulations.

In accordance with the "Copyright Regulations of the Mining and Materials Processing Institute of Japan (MMIJ)," the copyright of the manuscripts specified above shall be transferred to MMIJ upon acceptance for publication.
